Preventing Youth Marijuana Use

What’s the Problem?

- Marijuana is addictive and unsafe, especially for young people. The adolescent brain is still developing, and THC (the active ingredient in marijuana), can harm brain development.
- Marijuana’s average potency has more than tripled in the last two decades.
- Heavy marijuana use is associated with higher rates of skipping class, lower GPAs, and failure to complete college.
- Studies have shown an association between chronic marijuana use and increased rates of anxiety, depression, suicidal thoughts, and schizophrenia.
- Alcohol and marijuana are the most frequently used substances by teens; over 20% of high school juniors in San Diego County report drinking in the past 30 days, and over 15% report using marijuana.
- About 1 in 6 teens who start using marijuana will become addicted. Marijuana is by far the drug of choice for adolescents admitted into treatment.
- Marijuana comes in many forms with unregulated and unpredictable amounts of THC, including candy, snacks, and vaporizing ‘wax’ used in electronic smoking devices or ‘vape pens’.

How you can help reduce youth access to marijuana:

- According to public health research, reducing access and availability are effective ways to prevent alcohol, tobacco, marijuana and other drug use among youth.
- Understand the risks of youth marijuana use and be a positive role model; research information from credible sources and ask questions.
- If you’re a parent, give clear no-use messages to your children.
- Support local policies that prevent increased access of marijuana to youth.
- Support alcohol and drug prevention efforts in your community. Join a coalition like the North Coastal Prevention Coalition.
